Social and Personal

The debutantes are much in evidence these days, and any number of charming functions are being given in their honor. Most of the affairs are limited to the debutante set, and are charmingly arranged events. Miss Camilla Scott Wellford entertained at a card party yesterday afternoon at 8 o'clock at her home on Cathedral Place in honor of her cousin, Miss Josephine Pinckney, of Charleston, S. C., who is making her debut in Richmond this season. Decorations were in bowls of fall flowers, and only the debutantes of this winter were present.

Invitations have been issued for a Halloween party to be given by Miss Marie Stuart Sands, the debutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Conway Sands. The affair, which will be carried out in a very novel and delightful manner, will be given in the home of Miss Sands' parents, 1527 Hanover Avenue, on the evening of Friday, October 25, and again the guest list will include only the season's buds.

White-Clarke.
Miss Emma Clarke, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Harvey Clarke, of 1815 Hanover Avenue, was quietly married to George Frederick White, Ph. D., a member of the faculty of Clark University, yesterday at New Britain, Conn., in the home of her sister, Mrs. Hartwell Taylor. Miss Clarke is a popular member of the younger set in this city.

Church, officiated. Miss R. J. Hopkins, presided at the piano and rendered the Wedding March from "The Marriage of Figaro." The bride entered with her father, who gave her in marriage, and wore a handsome traveling gown of plum colored cloth with a modish hat of the same shade, and a corsage of orchids. The maid of honor, Miss Elizabeth Blume Cooper, was gowned in pink and white, and carried a big bouquet of white chrysanthemums. W. Henry Maddox attended his brother as best man.

Mr. and Mrs. Maddox left at once for a wedding trip that will include Washington, Buffalo, Niagara, Toronto, Canada and New York City. They will be at home after November 5, at 2515 East Franklin Street, Richmond.

Guest of Relatives.
Mrs. E. A. Crawford, Jr., of Atlanta, Ga., is visiting her mother, Mrs. Eugene J. Crawford, at her home, 20 North Meadow Street. A number of informal affairs have been given for Mrs. Crawford during her visit to Richmond.

Halloween Carnival.
The Ginter Park Woman's Club will open its fall season with a carnival for Pine Camp. The affair will take place in the town Assembly Hall and decorations will be in Halloween colors and novelties, harvest fruits and flowers. There are to be dances and illustrated songs in keeping with the fall season and the local Boy Scouts will give a demonstration. The booths will be arranged around the hall and will be most attractively decorated for the entertainment.

Double Wedding.
George C. Parker, Jr., of 2501 East Grace Street, and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Parker, of 20 North Meadow Street, were married at 11 o'clock on Monday morning. The double ceremony will be performed by the Rev. W. E. Johnston, pastor of the Venable Street Baptist Church.

Mr. Jumble has since last February held a position in the office of Acting Auditor Crenshaw. Mr. Rowe is manager of the Virginia Insurance and Bonding Company, Inc., and is first sergeant of the Richmond Howitzer Battalion.

The two couples will spend their honeymoon together, going to New York for a week. After returning to Richmond, they will take their home with the bride's father.

Married in Washington.
Miss Lotie Williams, a cousin of Mr. James M. Callis, of Barton Avenue, Brookland Park, and Benjamin C. Elmore, who is now in the army at Brunswick County, left the city yesterday at noon for Washington, where they were married at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Elmore, who will be at home in Brunswick County.

KING'S APPOINTMENT VERY APPROPRIATE

Duke of Atholl Gets Chancellorship of the Order of the Thistle.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONTENAY.

KING GEORGE'S appointment of the Duke of Atholl to the chancellorship of the Order of the Thistle, is particularly appropriate. For he is the senior member of this Scottish counterpart of the English Order of the Garter, antedating the foundation of the latter by several centuries. The Order of the Thistle, to which only Scotch peers belong, and of which the Duke of Atholl has been a knight for forty-five years, is said to have originated in the vision of a bright St. Andrew's Cross in the heavens, seen by Achilles, King of the Scots, and Hingus, King of the Picts, while they were engaged in prayer the night before their battle with Athelstan, King of England, in the eighth century. The Scottish coat of arms, which is the national emblem of Scotland, James V. reorganized the order in 1540, assigning to its knights stalls in the now ruined Chapel Royal of Holyrood at Edinburgh. James II., last of the Stuart Kings of Great Britain; Queen Anne, and in later years George IV., modified its statutes. Now it has its chapel in St. Giles's Cathedral, at Edinburgh.

The Duke of Atholl is a splendid type of the old feudal nobility, such as survives nowhere save in certain parts of Germany and Austria, and in Scotland. He enjoys several distinctions, unique not only in Great Britain, but also in Europe among them that of being permitted to maintain a full-fledged armed bodyguard, with artillery complete, about a thousand strong, composed exclusively of members of that great Murray clan of which he is the chief, and its regimental colors were presented to it fifty years ago by no less a personage than the late Queen Victoria, on the occasion of one of her many stays at Blair Atholl, his ancestral home in Perthshire.

Another distinction, also unique, is that he owns a cathedral, that of Dunkeld, also in Perthshire. The sacred edifice at Dunkeld was created by King David, in 1127, with the sanction of the Pope, and it bears some resemblance to the cathedral at Salisbury. Beneath the chapter house is the burial vault of the ducal house of Atholl, and within the cathedral walls rest the remains of many illustrious Scots, the most remarkable monument being that erected over the tomb of the "Wolf of Badenoch," Earl of Buchan and Badenoch, fourth son of King Robert II.

Blair Atholl is, as far as the exterior is concerned, a hideous old castle, of no architectural pretensions whatsoever. Its only remarkable feature being the incomparable double avenue of ancient elms by which it is approached. A portion of the edifice dates back to the thirteenth century, and was built by the Duke of Atholl from the crown, by one of those strange tenures which are occasionally to be found in Great Britain, the duke being under the obligation of presenting to the sovereign a knight whenever he or she visits the castle, under penalty of forfeiture. The consequence is that white roses have from time immemorial been kept in bloom at Blair Atholl, all the year through, so as to be prepared for any sudden and unannounced visit of the monarch; though the latter would hardly venture in these modern times to exercise his undoubted right of confiscating the castle and the huge estates if there were no white roses at hand.

Another feature of Blair Atholl, though of more modern origin, is the copper-plated hall which surmounted the dome of the Mahdi's tomb at Omdurman, and which now figures on the top of the dome of the castle of Blair Atholl. It was brought home from the Sudan in 1898 by the duke's eldest son, the Marquis of Tullibardine, who greatly distinguished himself under Lord Kitchener at the battle of Omdurman, and who picked up the trophy as his own particular piece of loot.

The Marquis is married to a very pretty Miss Ramsay, and when he brought her home to Blair Atholl the first time, as his wife, he caught her up in his arms and carried her across the threshold of the castle, in accordance with the requirements of the ancient custom of the house, that the bride who enters the castle for the first time must walk into it.

The duke, who is the only member of the House of Lords to speak Gaelic fluently, owns considerably more than 200,000 acres in Scotland, and lives almost entirely on his estates, though he has planted above 5,000,000 trees, a tree which he has been the first to introduce into Scotland. He is a very useful member of the British peerage, beloved by all his people on his extensive estates, and for whose moral and material welfare he considers himself responsible. His mother was one of the favorite women and most intimate confidantes of the late Queen Victoria. He himself was a boyhood friend of Edward VII., and was with him at the university. His wife, who died about ten years ago, and to whom he was devoted, was perhaps the most beautiful of the daughters of the late Sir Thomas Moncrieff, the others including the now Dowager Countess of Dudley; Helen, Lady Forbes, of Newe, and Lady Muir Mackenzie of Delvine.

The mention of his marriage reminds me that there is in the neighborhood of Blair Atholl an inn which goes by the name of "The Duke of Atholl's Arms." In former times there was a stage coach running thence called "The Duchess of Atholl," in honor of the duchess of Blair Atholl, and the hours of its arrival and departure were announced in capital letters in the newspapers of the district in the following manner: "The Duchess of Atholl starts from the Duke of Atholl's Arms every morning sharp at 7."

Blair Atholl has been subject to many sieges since the thirteenth century, notably during the Civil War, when Cromwell's men blew up a portion of it with gunpowder. Half a century later it was held for King James II. against William of Orange, while in 1745—its last experience of war and siege—it was held for King George II. against a force of Highlanders true to the cause of the Young Pretender, and headed by no less a personage than Lord George Murray, young son of the first Duke of Atholl, and father of the third duke. It is worthy of notice that in all these Jacobite sieges, and also in nearly every one of the great wars and rebellions in Scotland, there were as many Murrays serving on the one side as on the other. This has been the case of all the Murrays of Blair Atholl, and it is thanks to this that the family estates, hitherto escaped confiscation to the crown.

The family of the Duke of Atholl, and likewise his entire clan of Murray, are descended from one of the great Dutchmen who came over to Scotland some 800 years ago, and secured possession of extensive lands in Moray. His grandson was known as Sir Malcolm de Moravia, or Moray, and in the third generation from him his surname was transformed from Moravia into Murray. That is the origin of the great clan of Murray, which has so many representatives on this side of the Atlantic. Sir John Murray of Tulbarline was one of the governors of King James VI. of Scotland during that monarch's minority, and master of his household, being raised to the peerage as Earl of Tullibardine; and, in due course of time, the Earl of Tullibardine became Marquesses of Atholl and then dukes of that ilk.

For a time they exercised sovereign sway over the Isle of Man, the throne of which they had inherited through the marriage of the first Marquis of Atholl in 1659, to Lady Amelia Stanley, only child and heiress of the seventh Earl of Derby, who was also King of Man. While their reign over the Isle of Man lasted, the coat of arms of the latter was struck bearing their effigies; coins which to-day are extremely rare. In 1765 the third Duke of Atholl disposed of his sovereignty of the Isle of Man to George III., of Great Britain, on payment of $100,000 down and an annuity of $10,000 a year, which was subsequently increased to $15,000 a year. Sixty years later the then duke of Atholl compounded the annuity, and all remaining rights in and over the soil of the Isle of Man, for an additional sum of $2,000,000 paid by the English Treasury.
